The Wreck at Virginia Beach. During Sunday and the whole of that night the beach for miles was patrolled in search of bodies of the drowned sailors from the ship Elizabeth, and up to noon yesterday nineteen had been east up. According to later statements made by the two survivors of the life-saving crew, there were twenty-two men on the ship. Seven of the number were taken into the life-boat, while fifteen were in the ship's boat. This will make up the proper number for the crew of a vessel the size of the Elizabeth, and does a vessel the size of the Edzabeth, and does away with the supposition that some of the crew had remained by the wreck when the boats left her. From the empty barrels washed ashore, it is supposed they com-prised part of her deck load. Information received yesterday evening states that two of the bodies of the seamen of the Elizabeth had been identified as those of Gustave Battaber and G. Ammermann, and one more body had been recovered, making a total of twenty, fifteen of which were of the crew of the ship. The wrecking steamer Peed left Norfolk at midnight Sunday night, and was yesterday morning observed from the beach to be engaged in stripping the wreck. No communication has yet been es-tablished between the shore and the ship tablished between the shore and the ship; but from the fact that the wreckers are striping her, it is considered evident that there is no hope of getting her off, and she is thought to be full of water. The sea is making a clear breach over the hull, but the spars are still standing. Superintendent Rayner, of the Sixth district of the Life-saving Service, in which the disaster occurred, has arrived and assumed the direction of affairs. He is enlisting new men to take the place
